Platform Committee Tries To

CHICAGO, July 17—(INS)—President Roosevelt will be drafted today for a third term as the "free choice" of the Democratic National Convention and will accept renomination, after staging one of the shrewdest political coups d'etat in American political history.

Taking personal command of his own political fortunes, after his New Deal lieutenants provoked widespread resentment among delegates by bungling tactics, the President staked his future on one throw of the political dice. He sent a statement to the convention, expressing no desire to remain as President, or to be a candidate for renomination and releasing all delegates from voting for him.

The result was to insure his renomination.

The President will name his own running-mate but he will not get the exact platform he desired. His running-mate will be either Secretary of State Cordell Hull, of Tennessee, Federal Loan administrator Jesse Jones, of Texas, or Senator James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina. Secretary Hull already has declined the honor but there is a possibility that the President can persuade him to change his mind. Falling in this, the President will take Mr. Jones or Senator Byrnes as his running-mate, and probably in that order.

Mr. Roosevelt suffered one defeat however in the midst of all his success. His personal proposal for a pre-arranged platform was rejected by unanimous vote of the resolutions subcommittee. His proposal suggested the convention pledge itself to extend "all aid" to the Allies, except the sending of troops, called for virtual conscription of all males into militarily useful niches and proposed to help defeated nations in Europe re-establish democracies.

By William S. Neal

CHICAGO, July 17—(INS)—The Democratic Convention platform committee, rejecting a plea by President Roosevelt, today moved to report a platform which binds the party against foreign wars and denies governmental aid to the Allies.

The platform was written by a 1-man sub-committee and submitted to the full committee for approval after a dramatic fight, in which Mr. Roosevelt's proposals for aid to the democracies of Europe were emphatically turned down. Only one man, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, voted for the President's proposals.

Final action by the full committee was rushed so that the platform can be adopted today and pave the way for Mr. Roosevelt's nomination tonight.

Italy Claims Two British Planes Downed

Rome, July 17—Two British planes were shot down in an aerial dog fight with Italian pursuit ships over Malta, according to an Italian military bulletin today which also described Italian successes in Africa.

The bulletin said: "One of our submarines sank a big tanker in the Eastern Mediterranean. In an air-fight over Malta our pursuit planes shot down two enemy airplanes. One of our planes did not return."

Defy American Objections;
To Close Burma Road

Tokyo, July 17—In defiance of official American objections, Great Britain and Japan today reached an agreement for closing the Burma Road, over which military supplies have been flowing into China.

Discussing the agreement as Emperor Hirohito commanded Prince Konoye as new premier to succeed Admiral Yonai, an official foreign office spokesman took the attitude that the problems of American trade as involved in the Burma Road closing were "immaterial to Japan."

The spokesman at the same time took occasion to deny persistent reports that Great Britain is attempting to mediate the Sino-Japanese war. Military operations against the regime of General Chiang Kai-Shek will continue "unremittingly," he said.

Urge Construction of 40 Air
Fields in State

Harrisburg, July 17—The special legislative committee investigating Pennsylvania's air defense problems today submitted its report to Governor James urging construction of 40 air fields with Federal and State funds. It was estimated that $5,000,000 in state funds would carry the air defense program into 1941 when the legislature in regular session would be asked to appropriate additional money.

Establishment of seaplane bases at Philadelphia, Erie, Bristol, Wallenpaupack, Safe Harbor, Pittsburgh and Pymatuning, and possibly other locations was proposed.

The committee pointed out that Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Harrisburg, Erie, and Allentown-Bethlehem areas and other sites in the State ranked as air key-points.

Secondary sites for the establishment or expansion of air fields or air defenses included Reading, Bristol, Oil City, Mt. Jewett, Lancaster and State College.

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
NEW YORK, July 17—On the night of May 15 I was enroute to Paris by refugee train. I was going back from the Meuse front to find out why all correspondents had been blindfolded and handcuffed—stopped from learning or telling anything about the tremendous events then shaping.

It took eighteen hours to make this four-hour trip. There were continual air raids. Shattered rails had to be repaired. We were re-routed twice.

During a pause some eighty miles west of the Meuse we were stopped for the fiftieth time. I heard an ominous sound. It was an ominous sound. It was not until two days later that I learned it was a German barrage laid down not twenty-five miles back. By its volume and nearness it signaled the collapse of the ninth French army—and, with that collapse, the fall of France. It was the break-through.

Loyal Republican Club
Picnic To Be August 10

DOYLESTOWN, July 17—The fourth annual picnic of the Loyal Republican Club of Bucks County, the largest club of its kind in the State, with over 2,000 members, will be held at the club's picnic grounds at Buckingham on Saturday, August 10th.

According to Harris Holmes, Doylestown, general picnic chairman and his associate, Register of Wills Edward B. Watson, this year's outing will be an all-day affair, and will include a program of athletic competition consisting of softball games, a championship quilt match, and other contests.

"All you can eat and refreshments all day," the advance notices read. The picnic grounds outside the club headquarters has been extensively improved so that a crowd of 2,000 can very easily be accommodated.

5,000 MILES OF BOUNDARY
LINES ENCLOSE FORESTSProper Marking of Lines Important Part of State Forest Administration

1,000 MILES ANNUALLY

HARRISBURG, July 17—The proper marking of more than 5,000 miles of lines is an important part of State Forest administration, W. E. Montgomery, Chief of the Division of Management in the Department of Forests and Waters, said today.

Boundary lines on the 1,652,000 acres of State-owned forests are blazed, painted and tagged. The proper maintenance of these lines require the remarking and painting of the entire system at least once every five years. This means that 1,000 miles of line must be covered annually and the work also includes that of marking and maintaining forest corners.

Trees directly on the State Forest boundary lines are blazed on both sides. The blaze is painted white so that anyone may follow the line in either direction. A disc about five inches in diameter is nailed to the tree at intervals of 150 to 300 feet. The discs are fastened to the tree trunk with the back of the marker towards State land and the face away from State land.

Accurately established forest boundary lines are not only good business, Montgomery says, but they act as legal barriers for warning to timber operators on adjacent land, as lumbermen are naturally glad to be saved the embarrassing position of trespassing on State timber in their operations.

Corners of State Forest boundary lines are usually trees or piles of stone. When trees are used they are notched with three horizontal notches, one above the other, about six inches apart. Witness trees nearby are similarly notched on the sides facing the corner tree or rock pile.

Deer Killed Today; Hit
By Train at Eddington

A deer was killed when struck by a Pennsylvania Railroad train at Eddington this morning.

According to the report of the track section foreman, who summoned Deputy Game Warden Daniel Potter, the doe was found on the main track, near St. Francis Industrial School, at 7:30 o'clock. It was evidently killed a few hours previous. The dressed weight was gauged at 80 pounds.

A doe and two fawns were sighted by Otto Grupp, Jr., Crofton, on Sunday afternoon, the three at the time crossing Street Road, having come from the direction of the Distillery woods, and continuing on toward Dunks Ferry Road.

Chicago, July 16.
IF the realities of this situation are to be grasped it is essential to understand the basic facts about who is running this convention for Mr. Roosevelt.

Without that understanding the artificiality and sham of the so-called "draft" are not clearly visible; with that understanding the whole business seems forced and fraudulent.

THERE are two distinct sets of the gentlemanly third-term convention engineers. With both Mr. Roosevelt is—and has been—in close contact. One set, led by Mr. Harry Hopkins, is composed of high New Deal officials who are effective because through them

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

A resident of Doylestown, Ernest J. Keyser, in company with a friend from Philadelphia, is participating in a 2500-mile trip. They have left for Pehtigo, Wis., where they will visit paper mills with which Mr. Stewart is associated. Friends in Pittsburgh will be visited, and two days will be spent with the Rev. John Hauser, in Chicago, Ill. A fishing trip on Lake Michigan is also anticipated, and the journey home will be made partly by boat, the section from Detroit to Buffalo, 200 miles, being by water.

The Rev. Ernest vanden Bosch, minister of the Neshaminy of Warwick Presbyterian Church, Hartsville, will spend the week beginning July 22nd at the Presbyterian Young People's conference at Wayne. He will teach a Bible course there.

The Misses Ruth Balling, Jean Titus and Helen vanden Bosch will attend as delegates.

Albert J. Thompson, Wycombe, was re-elected president of the Eastern Federation of Feed Merchants at its convention held recently in Binghamton, N. Y.

During the same convention, Mr. Thompson's brother, Louis E. Thompson, Glen Ridge, N. J., was re-elected secretary-treasurer.

A reception was tendered to Russell L. Mast, recently-elected assistant pastor of Deep Run New Mennonite Church, and Mrs. Mast, a few evenings ago.

Mr. Mast, who recently was graduated from Hartford Theological Seminary, accepted the call to assist the Rev. Allen M. Fretz, Perkiesie, who has been serving this church for 57 years.

During the evening a brief program was presented, and greetings were extended to Mr. and Mrs. Mast by several members of the congregation, including Harvey D. Hunsberger, president of the board of trustees and who presided over the meeting; Levi S. Moyer, one of the deacons; Walter Schnell, superintendent of the Sunday School; Chester Mill, president of the C. E. society, and Mrs. Russell Huber, a representative of the ladies' aid society.

Dr. George T. Hayman, Doylestown, writes that he has had a grand time flying in planes over the Southwest and the South.

He writes he has had the finest and most pleasant trip of his life, with

Mr. Appleton, who resides with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Updyke, Market street, was known for many decades for the quality of the food he dispensed, and many with a taste for the succulent bivalves travelled miles to his establishment. His oyster tavern was located in the basement beneath the Wagman store, Mill and Wood streets, and thousands during the past 52 years travelled up and down those stairs to have "Shorty" wait upon their needs.

"I guess all the people who had stores on Mill street 40 or 50 years ago are either dead or have moved away. I can't think of any who were here that far back," he commented. "When I first opened up my store, I dumped the oyster and clam shells on the empty lot where the Winter show-rooms are now located."

He then continued: "I remember when I employed as many as six men to help me. They used push carts to make deliveries all over town. And we were busy on Friday? We were rushed to death, taking care of the orders that the men had taken earlier in the week. . . . Why, I've been in this one spot so long the proprietor wants me to still stay. He insisted that I keep the key so I could go into the store whenever I feel like it," he added as he pulled the key from his pocket.

Car Crashes Into Rear
Of Truck; Woman Injured

DOYLESTOWN, July 17—Serious injuries were suffered by Mrs. Emma D. Shive, 51, of North Clinton street, when on Monday night the car operated by her husband, Newton Shive, crashed into the rear of a parked truck.

The accident occurred on the Lackawanna Trail, in Horsham Township. Mrs. Shive is in the Abington Memorial Hospital, with lacerations of the face and head, possible fractured ribs and internal injuries. Her husband was treated at the hospital after the accident and discharged.

According to Private Wise, of the Doylestown sub-station of Motor Police, the Shive car, with the two occupants, ran into the truck that was in charge of Walter Owens, Carbondale. The truck is owned by a large transportation company.

Motor Police had erected red electric flares along the highway where the truck was stopped, and were checking up on the various cars, it is said.

DOYLESTOWN TO ENFORCE
18-YEAR-OLD ORDINANCEOwners Required To Hook
Properties Up To Sewer System

IN THREE MONTHS' TIME

DOYLESTOWN, July 17—An 18-year-old ordinance that was never enforced will be carried out to the letter in this borough as a result of a meeting of council yesterday.

The ordinance pertains to sewer hook-ups. Any property in Doylestown not now hooked up with the sewer system—and there are over 200—will be connected with the system within the next three months.

Owners of unconnected properties will be given notice served in person by an officer, to connect with the sewer within three months or the borough will do it and collect legally in the county courts. The additional revenue to the borough will amount to at least $2,000 a year, and it may reach $3,000.

Council also approved tentative plans for the rebuilding of North Main street—a section of the Lackawanna Trail—from the Court House to connect with the present new concrete highway at the north end of the borough line. The cost of this improvement will amount to about $1300 for the borough, the balance to be paid by the State and county. Trolley tracks now located on this stretch will be removed and sold by the borough.

Council made a donation of $150 toward the maintenance fund of the Burpee Memorial Playgrounds, in addition to the School Board's donation of $250.

Borough Treasurer Diver reported a balance of $7239.10 in the treasury; bonds outstanding amounting to $155,000, and notes in bank, $18,000.

WIDOW GETS HOUSE

Estate of $1300 Personal Prop-
By Mary McIlravy

DOYLESTOWN, July 17—Wilson Lightcap, 71, owner and proprietor of the historic "Cross Keys Hotel," Easton road, just over the Doylestown Borough line, who died on July 1st, left an estate of $7500 personal property and $10,000 real estate, according to his will probated at the office of the Bucks County Register of Wills.

The will, dated February 2, 1940, names a son, Aaron L. Lightcap, as executor. Aaron is bequeathed the "Cross Keys Hotel" and a trust fund. The widow, Mrs. Emma Lightcap, is bequeathed a dwelling house at 429 East Court street, Doylestown, provided she cares to reside there. At the time of her death the property is to be sold and the proceeds given to two sons, Aaron and Wilson T. Lightcap. If the widow so cares, the property can be sold immediately and the incomes paid to her. All the balance of the estate is bequeathed to the widow.

An estate of $400 personal property was left by Emma Kane, Buckingham Township, who died April 19th. Letters testamentary were granted to John J. Kane, executor.

An estate of $1300 personal property and $800 real estate in Bristol, was left by Mary J. McIlravy, Bristol, who died April 12th. Letters testamentary were granted to a brother, Christopher J. McGrane, executor. All of the estate is bequeathed to the brother, a resident of Bristol.

The will in the estate of Charles Murray, Warrington, who died June 4th, bequeaths $100 personal property and $4200 real estate to the widow, Elizabeth Murray. C. LeRoy Murray is named executor.

The following inventories were filed at the office of the Register of Wills yesterday:

Estate of Albert Merz, New Hope, $185.08 personal property and $750 real estate.

Estate of Mary J. McIlravy, Bristol, $1,304.56.

Estate of Milton H. Lynn, Quakertown, $189.92.

Estate of Hattie G. Priest, Bensalem township, $4,099.28.

Estate of Levinia S. Groff, Quakertown, $5,839.22.

Estate of Francesca Maggio, Bristol, $2,011.67.

Estate of Marion S. Heston, Upper Southampton township, $1,395.55.

Estate of Mary Emma Miller, Lower Makefield township, $8,225.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1940

STILL ON ORDER

Hitler is becoming more arrogant in his "advice," now being constantly reiterated, to the United States to stay out of European affairs. "Cherry" aims to annex all of Europe before starting to work in earnest on the United States, and obviously wants this country to wait patiently for the tap.

Bombs explode in New York.

Notes and bombs—how like the days immediately preceding United States entrance into the first World War!

What is the state of Uncle Sam's defenses? Is it better or worse than commonly supposed?

Lieut. Gen. Hugh A. Drum is quoted as saying that when the First Army moves into Northern New York in a few weeks for peacetime maneuvers it will have little to show in the way of modern mechanized equipment. It will have fewer than 100 tanks and not more than 100 airplanes. There will be nothing impressive in the way of increases in artillery pieces.

It will be using the guns and rifles of the World War period. As General Drum remarks, in critical times an army must make the best of the material at hand.

Some few weeks ago, President Roosevelt, spurred on by criticisms of past failures to use funds for national defense after a fashion that properly increased means for such defense, gave an accounting of the expenditures of his administration for strengthening the Army and Navy. From his own point of view, he did a very good job with his comparative figures—good, that is, until one discovered that a large proportion of the equipment of which he boasted was still on order.

Probably that explains why this peacetime army as it goes into maneuvers will drive mythical tanks and fly airplanes that do not exist. Most of its new weapons are still in production, according to General Drum. What is worrying many persons is just how long it will take to get equipment needed for defense out of production and into the field.

Packard, it is reported, will build the 9,000 airplane motors—3,000 for the U. S. and 6,000 for the British—which Henry Ford's scruples wouldn't permit him to make. According to company officials, production will start ten months after the contract is signed and the initial output will be twenty engines a month. If the war lasts long enough, both the U. S. and the British will have something to look forward to, anyway.

But if the occasion should arise for their use, it is to be hoped that tanks and guns and planes and the like will be more than merely on order. Already the American people are paying new taxes to pay for this equipment. Before long they will demand to know when deliveries will start.

If it is all the same to the political columnists and radio commentators, would they mind letting Michael rest for the time being? The point has been made.

A writer, taking a census of agencies that make laws in this country, is up to 31,000 already. Hence the old saying, "Ignorance of the law is no wonder."

Of course association makes people think alike. People riding in the same car tell the same lie about the wreck.

The Great Game of Politics

pose this other set, the first set would have no foundation upon which to function. It is the delegate strength supplied by this quartet of extremely notorious political practitioners upon which they really depend and without which they would be entirely futile and ineffectual.

THE first of these bosses is Mr. Eddie Flynn, the dominant factor in the Tammany organization, who is the chief Federal patronage dispenser for all New York, an extremely practical politician, indeed, and a frequent White House visitor. A second is Senator (Joe) Guffey, of Pennsylvania, who, for eight years, has distributed the Federal patronage in his State and is reputed to have gotten more jobs from the Administration to distribute than any other single individual in the country.

MR. GUFFEY has to his credit, among other slick tricks, the fact that he was the man who "sold" the President the idea of capturing the Negro vote through Federal patronage and induced him to appoint Robert L. Vann, the Negro editor of the Pittsburgh Courier, as special Assistant Attorney General. The use in Pennsylvania by the WPA for political purposes has been quite a stretch in the nostrils of citizens generally and the record of the Guffey machine is as unsavory as any in the country. Mr. Guffey is now a candidate for reelection to the Senate and his early hope of success is that the Roosevelt candidacy will pull him through.

THE third member of the quartet is Mayor (Eddie) Kelly of Chicago, whom Mr. Tom Courtney, now in the Kelly camp (according to Mr. John T. Flynn in last week's Colliers), once accused of being "in league with gangsters, bookies and thieves." Mr. Kelly is the dominant partner of the Kelly-Nash machine now in complete control of the State of Illinois. In addition to thousands of jobs, immense amounts of Federal funds for public works have been routed through Mr. Kelly by the Administration and he has played very close to the White House for seven years. With Mr. Guffey and Mr. Flynn, he was among the earliest and loudest "hollers" for the third term. Politically, Mr. Roosevelt has been of immense use to all these men. His continuation in the White House is so obviously politically advantageous to them that not to be for him would be insane.

o'clock. "Everything's set. Mother's got you a job at De Franc's."

"Where's that?" The shop was so small and so exclusive that Judith had never heard of it.

"It's tops. Over on Madison. It's new and they're going to town. You go over there at five. De Franc will see you then."

Judith arrived at De Franc's shop three minutes ahead of the appointed time. The place was small, but the windows were things of beauty in chrome and white. So was the salon inside. The salesgirl who met Judith at the door was evasive and pretty.

"I have an appointment with Mr. De Franc."

"Does madam wish to see some frocks?"

"No, thank you."

"The name, please?"

"Miss Van Dyke." Judith used her maiden name. The sales expert was puzzled. She felt she should know this girl. Her face was familiar. But she went off into the inner office, frowning.

Judith waited until almost six. She was sick with uncertainty. Maybe De Franc wouldn't take her. At last she was admitted into the great presence. She stood in the doorway in surprise.

A man lying on a white sofa. There was an ice pack on his head. "What is it you want, please?"

"Mrs. Van Mathas sent me."

Judith's knees were shaking. "I am very ill. I have a terrific headache."

"I'd be glad to come back tomorrow," Judith's lovely voice was arresting. He opened one eye. "Let me see you."

Judith came over nearer to the couch. He opened both eyes, squinted at her.

"You're not bad," milady's maestro observed. She stood there uncertainly.

"Do you know anything about clothes?"

"Only what I like to wear."

"That suit is all right. Where did you get it?"

"She named a Fifth Avenue shop. 'Terrible!'

"I'm sorry." She turned to leave. "I didn't tell you to go." He opened his eyes languidly. "Why do you society girls want to work?"

"I'm not a society girl."

"Oh, I thought you were."

"No, I know Mrs. Van Mathas, that's all."

"That might be enough."

"The name voice was impatient. 'Can't you bring me a lot of good customers?'

"I'm afraid not."

"Then why are you here?"

"Because I think I can sell."

De Franc suddenly laughed. "Well, I am overwhelmed! That's the first time any girl walked in here with such an idea! Usually they say they know everybody in the Social Register, and that they have a beautiful figure."

"I thought you wanted a sales girl. I'm sorry."

"My dear, what did you say your name was—oh, yes, Judith Van Dyke—my dear Judith, I do want able sales people. But you modern girls seem to think I hire you to wear my best frocks out dancing every night."

There was a difficult silence. Then: "Well, I hire you." He slumped back and groaned. "Will you get me some more ice in this thing?" He threw the bag at her. Judith caught it and went out somewhat confused. The salesgirl who had met her at the door was there. "Where can I find ice for this?" Judith asked.

The woman's eyebrows went up. "In the back room."

The only ice Judith could find was around the bottle of drinking water. She put some of it into the bag and returned to De Franc. She did not speak as she put the bag on his over-groomed head.

"Good girl! Come tomorrow at nine. Wear something black." He groaned again. "Now leave me. You work on commission. I guarantee $12 a week. If you're real smart, you'll make money."

CHAPTER TWENTY-EIGHT

Hugh had to go back to his office to finish his column. He tried to persuade Judith to go to a movie until he had finished. "Then we can do the town."

"No, Hugh. Not tonight." So he let her go. He walked with her to the subway in Times Square before he said goodbye.

On the ride uptown, Judith slumped in her seat. Somehow her festive mood had gone. She felt desperately alone. Why hadn't she waited for Hugh? She dreaded going up to her stuffy room.

When Judith reached the apartment door, somebody called her. A man stepped out of a car parked by the curb.

"I've been waiting for you." It was Michael Dudley. Until she heard his voice, she did not realize how she had missed him.

"Come. We'll drive for a little while."

She got into the car beside him, and Michael took the wheel, starting toward the Drive. It was a beautiful spring night.

"I'm sorry, Judith."

"Don't be. It's for the best. It had to come."

"You're all right?"

"Oh, yes."

Michael turned onto the Washington Bridge. "The view will be fine tonight."

Now that they were together, they seemed to have lost all desire to talk. Finally Michael got Judith to tell him about her job. And then—suddenly—

"I had to see you tonight. You know how I feel."

"Please, Michael."

He caught her hand. "I won't see you again until it's all over out there. Then, Judith, may I try? Every man has a right to fight for his happiness."

She shook her head. "I'm afraid I can't give it to you, Michael." She sighed. "You see it's hard to make you understand how I feel about Tex. I'm not in love with him any more. It isn't that. But I'll always feel I belong to him. He'll need me some day. I've got to wait."

With that Dudley turned the car around, and drove back home. As they approached Judith's rooming house, Michael spoke again: "There are some people standing about, Judith. Probably newspaper men."

Dudley drove on past, into the park, explaining, "You can't go back there now."

"I couldn't face them!" Judith agreed. "I wonder how they found out where I lived?"

"From Reno, probably."

"Sit here, while I telephone." Michael suggested and went in to a drugstore. When he came out, he said: "Everything's set. I called Van Mathas. His mother's in town. I'm going to take you there."

"Oh, no!"

"Where else?" Michael asked. "They might find you in a hotel. Does your landlady know where you work?"

"No, but Hugh does."

"He's in a nice spot if his editor finds out."

"I know. But they mustn't find my office. They can't!"

"All right, then. Dick's mother lives on the Avenue. Lucky she hasn't gone over to Long Island for the summer."

Michael went to the Van Mathas apartment with Judith. Nobody was home, but the maid had been told that Judith was coming. Michael said, "I'll stay awhile." He lit a cigarette.

But conversation was too painful for them. He found a game of Chinese checkers on the table, undertook to teach Judith. It was thus that Dick found them when he came in an hour later.

"Hello, Judith. How are you, Dudley?" He tossed the latter the morning papers.

"I was afraid of this," Dudley remarked. There staring at them was her own photograph beside recent ones of Sonia and Tex. Her New York address appeared, too.

"What am I going to do? None at the office knows about my troubles. Hugh didn't tell, I'm sure."

"I'm sure he didn't," Dudley said crisply. "Be sure to let me know how things go tomorrow. You've got to move from that room."

At the office things were as usual. Judith was four minutes early; the place was deserted when she came into the reception room. Hartman's partner was the first to arrive. She felt he eyed her with curiosity; but she might have been mistaken. When Miss Simpson arrived, she nodded coldly, went on to her office.

Hugh Lanning telephoned her at 10 A. M. "The office would be wild if they thought I knew where you are. But what can I do?"

"They'll hear fast enough, Hugh," Judith replied. "Don't worry."

Mr. Hartman did not come in that morning. Miss Simpson, leaving for lunch, said he was in court. Before she returned, three men entered.

"Mrs. Aimes?" one of them asked. There was no out. They must be reporters!

"Yes."

The newspapermen clustered about her, asking her what she thought about Tex's divorce. "We just agreed to disagree," was her only comment.

"And Miss Winthrop?"

"They've been friends for a long time."

Some photographers came in the door then. "No pictures, please! I can't jeopardize my job here," she protested.

Into the midst of this confusion stepped Miss Simpson. She looked severely at Judith. There were clients waiting.

"Will you please go to my office?" she said to Judith and then managed smartly to get rid of the reporters and photographers. Judith waited anxiously. An hour went by. Miss Simpson was in conference with the junior partner. Then she confronted Judith.

"I'm sorry, Mrs. Aimes, but we can't have all this confusion. We think it is better if you resign."

"As you wish."

So Judith was out of a job. She tried to telephone Dudley from the drugstore downstairs but he was out. Now that the reporters had found her, she might just as well go to her room. It no longer mattered. Yet Judith wandered about the streets uncertain what to do. It was too late in the day to job-hunt.

At last, when Judith put her key in the door, she heard footsteps. It was Mrs. Wilkes. She had her head tied up. "I've got the most awful headache. I couldn't work. It was terrible all last night. Reporters all over the place here! This is a respectable house. I know I shouldn't have rented a room to a woman."

"You want me to leave?" Judith asked in a quiet voice.

"If you will."

Judith packed her few belongings, locked up her trunk. She had no idea where to go when she called a taxi. She asked its driver to suggest a decent, inexpensive hotel. He made some suggestions, drove her downtown.

"Here we are. This is OK."

It was a rather old place, small and run-down. But when Judith got inside, it was clean and the rates were fair.

"I'd rather the people where I lived didn't know my address," she suggested to the helpful cabby in dismissing him with a fair tip.

"We'll fix that," he promised.

Judith in her hotel room, broke down and wept. No use to unpack. She'd be moving on in a few days.

Then she tried to reach Michael Dudley again. But it was no use. She telephoned to the Van Mathas apartment, told the maid she would not be there that night. She also left a message for Dick, and her telephone number. He phoned within an hour.

"I waited for you at the office," Dick said. "They didn't tell me what happened. I'll be right down."

Judith met him in the lobby half an hour later. Van Mathas soon insisted: "Don't you worry. Mother will fix things. She'll find work for you—with a couturier, perhaps. You should be able to sell clothes. You wear them so well."

"They'd find out who I was."

"That won't matter now. The heat's off." He looked at Judith's tired, dispirited face. "You need sleep. Call you early tomorrow."

Judith waited for hours hoping that Michael Dudley might call, but he didn't.

Next morning Dick phoned at ten

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

James Cagney, Ann Sheridan and Pat O'Brien make up the triple-threat star cast of the Grand Theatre's next attraction, "Torrid Zone," opening on Thursday. In the featured supporting cast are Andy Devine, Helen Vinson, Jerome Cowan and George Tobias, among a host of others. "Torrid Zone," as its title indicates, has its setting south of the border, down below Mexico way. Pat O'Brien is the big boss for the fruit company that owns most of Puerto Aguilar, which also makes him the virtual boss of the whole territory. He and his ace plantation manager, played by Cagney, have a standing feud, and are constantly striving to outsmart each other.

BRISTOL THEATRE

With a cast headed by Victor Mature, Lon Chaney, Jr., and Carole Landis, Hal Roach's great spectacle film drama of prehistoric times, "One Million B. C.," will have a gala premiere at the Bristol Theatre, today.

The story centers about the Shell People and the Rock Tribe, two peoples who may be described as cave-men in the days when huge dinosaurs roamed the earth. The Shell People are less savage and more advanced than the Rock Tribe. A volcano and an earthquake bring disaster and desolation to the land of the Rock Tribe and later a gargantuan dinosaur attacks the cave of the Shell People. These dangers eventually unite the two hostile tribes and together they undertake to build a new civilization on a peaceful basis.

RITZ THEATRE

The Cisco Kid gallops back from the border with his guns blazing to prove once again he's still the most dashing caballero of them all!

Handsome Cesar Romero, who first played Cisco in "The Cisco Kid and the Lady" is again the colorful O. Henry outlaw—barking guns, flashing eyes, romantic heart and all—in "Viva Cisco Kid," which is coming to the Ritz Theatre today.

Eight petite French dancers lend spice and zest to "In Old Missouri," now showing at the Ritz.

Today's Quiet Moment

(By Howard L. Zepp, Th. M.)

If we would be true to Thee we must be true to the truth. It takes courage to move into new areas of truth. Help us to feel that the greatest cowardice is to be unwilling to follow the Light of Truth as it challenges us to move out into new areas of thought, of experience, and of achievement. Amen.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Roche, Locust street, spent Sunday in Doylestown, visiting Mr. and Mrs. Hugh McVann.

William Elmer, Cedar street, is spending this week in Chicago, Ill.

Barbara Lynn, Mill street, spent a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Jonathan Wright, Yardley; and several days with Mr. and Mrs. Henry Reichert, Holmesburg.

Miss Marie Lippincott has returned to Linden street, after a week in Ocean Grove, N. J., with Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Broomly.

Mrs. Fred Weik and daughter Thelma, Pond street, spent a day the latter part of the week visiting Miss Gladys Weik at Ocean Grove, N. J.

Mr. and Mrs. William Doak, Radcliffe street, and guest, Miss Isabel Moberly, St. Louis, Mo., week-ended in Manaloking, N. J., visiting Mr. Doak's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Doak, who have a Summer home at that resort.

Mrs. Theresa Gavegan, Miss Margaret V. Barrett, Miss Katherine Booth, and Walter and Paul Barrett, Beaver street, spent Sunday in Mauch Chunk, visiting relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Queen and daughter, Patricia, Madison street, left Sunday for Huntington, W. Va., where they will spend two weeks' vacation visiting relatives and friends.

Ned Townsend, Mansion street, left last week for Duncannon, to spend several weeks with Miss Grace Haas.

THERMOMETERS TAKE GUESS WORK OUT OF
FOOD PREPARATION

By Miss Edna Stephany

Home Economics Representative
"I guess the sirup forms a hard ball now," the biggest girl at the taffy pull used to say. That was the signal to take the pan off the fire and pour the candy out to cool. Then with buttered hands the crowd would pull the taffy. It was all a lot of fun, but only too often the candy never did get firm enough to cut into pieces—and sometimes it got hard before there was a chance to pull it.

But today, by using the thermometer, it's possible to get the candy the same every time.

The thermometers for candy-making are just one of the ways in which controlled temperature is now taking the "guess work" out of food preparation. Correct temperature is equally important for frying tender doughnuts—for roasting meat to just the right turn—for the best conditions for the rising of bread dough—and even for the safe storage of foods that spoil easily.

Modern cookbooks suggest cooking by exact temperature in almost every recipe. For oven-cookery, they have divided the temperature scale into several sections.

Egg dishes and other foods that have delicate proteins are baked at the lower end of the scale. For example, a very slow oven (225 to 250 degrees F.) is used for baking fruit whips. A slow oven (250 to 300 degrees F.) is used for sponge cake and custards. And a very moderate oven (300 to 325 degrees F.) is used for souffles and angel food cake.

A moderate oven (325 to 375 degrees F.) is used for baking most cakes, and a moderately hot oven (375 to 400 degrees F.) is right for most cookies. A hot oven (400 to 450 degrees F.) is needed for rolls and muffins. But a very hot oven (450 to 500 degrees F.) is used only in special cases—such as the first step in baking popovers.

Naturally the lower temperatures are needed when the food is to cook slowly and to brown gradually, and the higher temperatures when it is to have a crisp crust. Food that is heavy with sugar or dried fruit also needs a lower temperature so the sugar will not scorch.

It is also interesting to note that when a food is in the shape of a thick mass, it is cooked at a lower temperature than when it is spread out thin. For example, a large turkey or a good-sized capon is roasted at a lower temperature than a smaller bird—in order to cook light meat and dark meat through evenly without burning the skin. And for the same reason, a loaf cake is baked at a lower temperature than cup cakes.

The oven thermometer and regulators are helpful in following exact temperatures for baking.

The roast-meat thermometer is another device that helps the cook to turn out perfectly cooked meats. Inserted into the center of the roast, and left there all the time it is in the oven, one can tell when the inside of the roast is cooked to just the desired turn.

For deep-fat frying, controlled temperature is particularly important. A deep-fat frying thermometer that clamps over the side of the pan is a much more convenient method for indicating the temperature of the fat than the test of browning a cube of bread in a certain number of seconds.

60 Fire Companies Will Stage Annual Demonstration

A great spectacle will be presented at Willow Grove Park, Wednesday evening, July 24th, when more than 60 fire companies under auspices of Abington Township Firemen's Association stage their annual demonstration of fire-fighting and equipment around the park lake.

This monster demonstration starts with a parade of the participating fire companies and includes fireworks on the lake, a display of the Fountain of Rainbows, climaxed by a gigantic water barrage which will be highlighted by a score of powerful floodlights and two 800,000-candle-power army searchlights.

Every Thursday evening a new stage play by a different Little Theatre group is presented in the park's musical pavilion. On July 18th, the well-known Bessie V. Hicks' players will present Clifford Goldsmith's Broadway success entitled "What a Life." On July 25th, the neighborhood players will produce "The Good Hope."
